emitted from the chimney of the Yamashiro, a ship of the Yamashiro fleet, a Japanese vessel. Flares also issued out of the ship, after these disappeared about five minutes after their appearance and then the colour of the smoke changed to white.
Usually the smoke from the springs at the summit of the hill is only visible with the naked eye from the distance of a few rods, but now it can be seen ten rods away.

The Queen tells us that the latest social innovation in London is the use of place of dining-room-tables, which are shown to gentlemen on arriving, a card being at the same time handed to them on which is written the name of the lady they are to dine with, and the name of the lady in question. Why, says the Japan Gazette, anyone who has the honour of being invited to dine at Government House in Hongkong twenty-three years ago might have given London a wrinkle. For, on entering the hall, the first business of each guest, after divesting himself of his overcoat and hat, was to inspect, under the guidance of a silk orderly, a miniature reproduction of the dining-room and dining-table, in which every article of furniture and the use of each was inscribed in his place.

Apparently, then, the old customs of Hongkong are coming upon London with delightful freshness. That is flattering, but the "Liverpool of the Orient," as a certain classical Governor used to say, ought to have the honour of the invention.
I do, we doubt the accuracy of the Queen's statement, for it is not the social functions on the minds of most men that can remain so long unemployed. The one thing that sixty-five men out of every hundred can being possibility remunerated, unless the assistance of their eyes be enlisted, is the place at which they are to locate themselves when they enter a strange dining-room.
